

Microhematuria In Primary Care

- Three case studies of patients with microhematuria
  - What would you do with these patients?
- Discussion of etiologies, risk factors, and the true definition of microhematuria
- Discuss causes of false positive and benign causes of microhematuria
- Review the possible examination and laboratory testing useful in the evaluation of microhematuria
- Discuss the appropriate workup of microhematuria in primary care, including the usage of the newly accepted Hematuria Risk Index
- Review the initial three patient case studies and what the attendees might do with these patients after the lecture content