

Angela Shuman is Vice President of State Advocacy and Outreach at the American Academy of Physician Associates, leading AAPA's state advocacy program and strategic outreach to AAPA's more than 120 constituent organizations. She has extensive experience with state advocacy and health policy in professional associations, having led state advocacy programs for the American College of Cardiology and the American Physical Therapy Association. Angela earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Ball State University and a Master of Public Administration degree from Georgia Southern University.

While she loves living in the District of Columbia and its excellent cultural and dining scenes, Angela escapes to the woods as often as possible to hike and explore the outdoors with her favorite partners in adventure, her husband and dog.
